Quoting and paraphrasing

- Give credit:
  - when you quote someone directly
  - when you use an idea that you did not know before you did your research
  - when you want to offer support for surprising information
- Quoting = using the exact words of another person by enclosing them in quotation marks
- Paraphrasing = saying the same idea in another way
- Terms:
  - author = the organization or person who communicated the original information
  - quoted text = the actual words taken from another source
  - quotation marks = the punctuation surrounding the quoted text
  - signal phrase = a phrase, sentence, or passage that introduces the quotation
  - source = any published or unpublished work where you find the information
  - citation = a referenced source enclosed in parentheses that includes information (author's name, year of publication, page number)

In-text citations

In-text citations consist of the surname(s) of the author(s) and the year of publication.

If there is no author, use the title (or a short form of the title, if it is lengthy) and the year. Titles that are italicized in the reference list are italicized in text; titles that are not italicized in the reference list appear in quotation marks.

If there is no date, use “n.d.” (without quotation marks) instead.

Thesis types

Claim = observations we make allow us to draw conclusions. Ex.: Our continued practice of polluting water threatens to destroy all animal life.

Proposition = research and observation urge us to propose a new path of thinking or acting. Ex.: Governments throughout the world should condemn known polluters to prison.

Prediction = research may have led you to an insight that enables you to predict some future effect you can build an argument on. Ex. If you don't restrict the production of plastics, future generations will blame us for the destruction of sea life.

Sources and resources

Some definitions

Primary literature/sources are original materials. In the sciences, the primary literature presents or comments upon the immediate results of research activities. A direct source of information or research, a document not emended by a third party.

Secondary literature includes books, annual reviews, textbooks, and some periodicals. Secondary sources differ from reference materials in at least one important way: secondary sources, like reference materials, may answer factual questions; however, they also present background information and summarize results of scientific work so that you can read the full range of thinking on a particular topic.

Tertiary sources provide overviews of topics by synthesizing information gathered from other resources. Tertiary resources often provide data in a convenient form or provide information with context by which to interpret it.

The distinctions between primary, secondary, and tertiary sources can be ambiguous. An individual document may be a primary source in one context and a secondary source in another. Encyclopedias are typically considered tertiary sources, but a study of how encyclopedias have changed on the Internet would use them as primary sources. Time is a defining element.

Primary, secondary, and tertiary sources - 1

In the humanities and social sciences, primary sources are the direct evidence or first-hand accounts of events without secondary analysis or interpretation. A primary source is a work that was created or written contemporary with the period or subject being studied. Secondary sources analyze or interpret historical events or creative works.

Primary sources

- Diaries
- Interviews
- Letters
- Original works of art
- Photographs
- Speeches
- Works of literature

A primary source is an original document containing firsthand information about a topic. Different fields of study may use different types of primary sources.

Primary, secondary, and tertiary sources - 2

Secondary sources

- Biographies
- Dissertations
- Indexes, abstracts, bibliographies (used to locate a secondary source)
- Journal articles
- Monographs

A secondary source contains commentary on or discussion about a primary source. The most important feature of secondary sources is that they offer an interpretation of information gathered from primary sources.

Tertiary sources

- Dictionaries
- Encyclopedias
- Handbooks

A tertiary source presents summaries or condensed versions of materials, usually with references back to the primary and/or secondary sources. They can be a good place to look up facts or get a general overview of a subject, but they rarely contain original material.

Evaluating sources

- Any website you use should have at least
  - the name of the organisation (or person) who created the site, and some basic information about the organisation (or person);
  - the date the information was posted;
  - the qualifications of any person whose opinions are cited;
  - an explanation of how the information was gathered
- Also look for:
  - the purpose of the site (To inform? To persuade? To sell something?)
  - any advertisements on the site (What is being advertised? Why?)
  - strong or emotional language that may indicate a bias (Even in cases when you are looking for opinions, you should be aware of the view of the site. Some sites with exaggerated language could actually be ironic or intentionally humorous)
