“The Human Species : a Mutant Concept.

As a consequence of the environmental catastrophe, giving rise to the notion of the “Anthropocene”, and the outbreak of Covid-19, a pandemic arising from the “crossing of the Species Barrier”, the concept of the “Human Species” is undergoing a crucial mutation. No longer meaning either a zoological category allowing it to classify Homo Sapiens and study its evolution, or an ethical ideal governing the actions of individuals, it refers to a material entity, globally and instantly interacting with itself, which as such could be the “subject” and the “object” of political decisions. At the same time, however, internal divisions, which discriminate among nations, classes, genders, races, cultures, and pit “humans” against one another, appear as essential characteristics of the “species” itself. They lie at the center of a cosmopolitics which is also a biopolitics. This situation calls for a genealogy of the concept in Modern Times and a new foundation of the idea of “species-being” (Gattungswesen) once installed by Feuerbach and Marx at the root of their articulation of nature and history.”
